

Grieving: A Time for Reflection

What does healing look like?

It is different for everyone. As you look for your own milestones, keep these in mind. They have been signs of hope for others who are grieving.

“I pumped my own gas.”

“I suddenly realized I was actually looking forward to something!”

“I could concentrate at work.”

“I didn’t feel guilty about having a good time.”

“I could talk about him without falling apart.”

“I learned how to pay the bills.”

“I was able to honor her birthday even though I miss her so much.”

Adjusting over the past months has offered opportunities to change and grow.

Take a moment to reflect on the progress you have made by thinking about the following questions.

What decisions have you made in the past months? _____

What have you discovered that you are capable of accomplishing? _____

What have you learned? _____

How have you changed? _____

What goals do you have for the months ahead? _____
